upon questions of public interest. We find the correspondence in the Par-kersburg Gazette.

Mr. Van Winkle alludes to the asser tion of the Missouri Republican that he would favor the repeal of the Congressional test oath; but says he has never expressed any opinion on the subject. He adds that "whenever satisfied the necessity for it has ceased," he "shall hasten to vote for its repeal." No inference can be drawn from a general declaration such as this. Of course every one would do that, but there will be great diversity of opinion as to when the necessity has "ceased." He says, however, concerning the test oath imposed on returned rebels in this State, who seek to reciothe themselves with the franchise, rebels in this State, who seek to re-clothe themselves with the franchise, clothe themselves with the franchise, not only that it is unconstitutional, but that the "occasion on which only a test outh could be required from citizens as such had coused to exist," before the late election; and he adds that "it is deeply to be regretted that it was exacted in any case." The Constitution authors in the existence of "war or insurrection," and this is the "occasion," we take it, which Mr. Van Winkle means the say "had ceased." He may be correct in this, but the Administration at Washington certainly do not regard the insurrection as having ceased.
